Lisbon City Council, Quercus and the Meo Kalorama festival have joined forces to begin reforestation of the Bela Vista park in Lisbon.

The initiative took place this Friday, February 16, with the planting of 80 trees, in which children from a school in the region participated.

The capital's local authority was present at the initiative, with councillor Ângelo Pereira highlighting the importance of making the city greener, as well as emphasizing the fight against climate change.

Quercus also highlighted the importance of reforestation and hopes for everyone's contribution. The president of the association, Alexandra Azevedo, says that the goal is to plant a thousand trees, which are not only important for oxygen, but also for the water cycle.

"We are also planting water", emphasizes the leader.

Sustainability is one of the pillars of Meo Kalorama and, therefore, it has joined forces with the reforestation of the Bela Vista park in Lisbon, where the festival will take place between 29 and 31 August.

"We occupied the space for three days, which has a huge impact, and what we are looking for here is to give back in some way," says Meo Kalorama's communications director, Andreia Criner.

Social inclusion is also important for Meo Kalorama, which this Friday visited the young people living in the Casa de Acolhimento - Casa das Cores. These young people were invited to the third edition of the festival, which has the support of Rádio Comercial.
